Vollore is known in the history of Auvergne since the 6th century when Thierry, the son of Clovis, the first king of France, came to besiege the place in 532.

The fortress, of which the imposing Romanesque keep remains today, was built in the 12th century by the old family of Vollore. The castle then passed to the Thiers and Chazeron families in the 17th century, the Montmorins transform it and give it its current appearance.

In the same family for more than 2 centuries, Vollore is today the living home in Auvergne of the descendants of General de Lafayette, where respect for the past knows how to accommodate the comfort and demands of modern life. The castle of Vollore belongs to those houses whose origins are thousands of years old, and which always remain in phase with their time. Lunch (about 2 hours drive). Installation at the hotel.

The history of the construction of the frigate Hermione
We are in 1779. In the heart of the Rochefort Naval Arsenal, Chevallard Aîné finished the plans for a series of frigates including the Hermione. Carpenters, blacksmiths and... convicts are busy. It is necessary to finish the construction of the frigate Hermione, "granddaughter of the ocean" according to Greek mythology.

Let us remember, on the other side of the Atlantic, the war of independence is rumbling... The Hermione, lighter than a warship, will be attached to a squadron to serve as a scout and assist warships in difficulty during a battle...

Hermione and Lafayette in the conflict
for the independence of the United States.

Our Hermione, built at Rochefort, leaves the Arsenal in 1780, with Gilbert Motier, Marquis de Lafayette, on board, to take part in this fight for independence.

Under the command of La Touche-Tréville, the Hermione took part in decisive victories and became forever a symbol of freedom and Franco-American brotherhood.

Lafayette illustrated himself there during the famous balcony scene, which took place on October 06, 1789, when Queen Marie-Antoinette was forced to show herself on a balcony of the marble court in front of the angry people. Lafayette kissed the sovereign's hand, helping to calm the rioters.

Lunch in Versailles in one of the restaurants located in the gardens of the Château. Road to Paris.

Afternoon stroll in the district of Lafayette, stops on the buildings where he lived.

At the end of the day, installation at the hotel in the heart of Paris
Le Marquis Faubourg St Honoré 5*.

The Palais Garnier, the Champs Élysées, the Louvre Museum, the Place Vendôme... in the heart of the most enchanting Paris, a discreet carriage entrance framed by two lanterns and topped by a mascarón signals the entrance to the Marquis Faubourg Saint-Honoré, in the Rue d'Anjou.

The architect and designer Michele Bönan has managed to revive this 18th century mansion where the Marquis de La Fayette lived. Selected drawings and photographs on the walls, unique furniture, delicate ivory-colored beams, charming bookcases; so many refined details from which emanates a subtly hushed atmosphere. As for the suites, solid wood doors and authentic Louis XVI marble fireplaces are the guardians of their cosy intimacy.

Dinner at the historic restaurant Le Procope in the Latin Quarter and night in Paris
